Developer's comments: AppSpy takes a look at AG Drive in their latest video review. Giving it top marks and only dinging it for not having multiplayer. If you like "swooshy swoopy futuristic racers" this one might be the one.

Nutritional status and status of micronutrients in children with anorexia nervosa and in their family members. Nutritional status and status of micronutrients in children with anorexia nervosa and in their family members was investigated. Plasma nutritional status markers (albumin, prealbumin, transferrin and plasma iron, ferritin, total cholesterol, HDL-cholesterol and triglycerides), serum concentrations of trace elements (copper, zinc, iron, selenium, magnesium, manganese, chromium, vanadium, nickel, molybdenum, barium and strontium), plasma concentrations of folate and vitamin B12 were measured. This study has shown that malnutrition is prevalent in children with anorexia nervosa. Vitamin B12 deficiency is present in 58% of children with anorexia nervosa and in 41% of family members, a mild degree of vitamin B12 deficiency is present in 26% of children with anorexia nervosa and in 34% of family members.

$ 1.00 THE GRIZZLY Smooth heavy strings with lightweight neck and fretboard finish. The GRIZZLY is a well-balanced, all-purpose steel instrument that can be used for both folk and bluegrass, but also lends itself well to Jazz and Folk. Compared to the Precept and the AP-X, the GRIZZLY is a "fatter" instrument, producing a slightly rounder and deeper sound. The strings are heavier and the neck is more resistant to bending than in the Precept. It is, however, a bit lighter and smaller than the AP-X. Another advantage is that the lower height of

of GLUT2 activity and lactic acidosis was found in ^{18}F -DASB-PET brain images of a patient with type 2 diabetes under hemodialysis and pancreateo-jejunostomy, with a gradual decrease in the PET images after surgical lesion, indicating that the dynamic PET images of ^{18}F -DASB could be useful to evaluate the effects of early surgical lesion and recovery of the lesion ([@B108]). Using the same ^{18}F -DASB-PET technology, evaluation of the effect of tyrosine kinase inhibitors on GLUT2 expression have been studied using PET. In cases where the kinase is inhibited, a decrease in GLUT2 expression in the striatum of rats has been found in PET images as predicted by in vitro studies. In a human study, serial PET images of cancer patients before and during erlotinib therapy revealed a decrease in GLUT2 expression in responders to erlotinib ([@B109]). To date, no types of standard PET tracers for the evaluation of GLUT2 expression in the brain have been developed. Therefore, novel PET tracers with higher selectivity and better biodistribution characteristics for GLUT2-binding than ^{18}F -DASB, with a longer half-life (e.g., ^{18}F -ABP 713), may solve this problem ([@B110]). Moreover, selective PET tracers for GLUT2 in the brain need to be evaluated using animal models, in order to determine the optimal position and condition for applying the tracers for humans. ===== Another approach to identifying the processes and pathways involved in glutamate recycling is to identify and to quantitatively analyze GLT2 protein in the brain using specific antibodies. The antibody specificity is important to avoid possible false positive signals. The three available commercially available antibodies for GLT2 have been thoroughly reviewed elsewhere ([@B111]). Among the three antibodies, only a commercially available antibody, GLT-2 (NeuroMab, Inc.), has been extensively characterized ([@B92], [@B93], [@B115]). Thus, we focused our review on this antibody. Immunocytochemical and immunohistochemical studies ([@B92], [@B93], [@B115]) revealed that the distribution and density of GLT2 protein are identical
