Cardiovascular damage has been attributed to both acute and chronic exposure to cocaine. The number of annual deaths attributable to cocaine overdose remains unclear. There is no curative treatment for cocaine abuse, and little is known about the long-term effects of cocaine. Effects of cocaine on the cardiac impulse are poorly understood. There are very few data on the acute cardiotoxic effects of cocaine and doses that are clinically relevant. Patients may not inform the clinician as to whether they are abusing cocaine, and if they do, the clinician may not suspect cardiac toxicity. Cardiac events can occur in patients with known risk factors for cardiovascular disease (eg, hypertension, obesity, diabetes mellitus, or smoking) or with no risk factors. This article reviews our current knowledge of the acute and chronic effects of cocaine on the human heart. Maternal progesterone and sex hormones in the development of secondary sex characteristics and the size of the neonatal testes in the horse. Progesterone was measured in maternal and neonatal blood during the developmental period leading to birth in the horse. In the early embryonic stage, maternal progesterone was highest before pregnancy and increased slightly prior to mating. One week after mating it was reduced again, reached a minimum during gestation, and increased rapidly after parturition. In the neonatal period, maternal progesterone increased from birth to about 3 weeks and then decreased until 10 weeks, when the pups were no longer immunologically passive. Neonatal progesterone increased dramatically from 10 to 40 weeks and then decreased to prepubertal levels. The sex hormones testosterone (T) and estradiol were measured in maternal and neonatal blood during the same period. Maternal T increased at least 5 weeks before mating and then decreased until 3 weeks after parturition when it increased again. Neonatal T increased markedly at birth and decreased within 24 h. At 34 weeks of age, it was still below prepubertal levels. The maternal and neonatal estradiol was high at the beginning of the pregnancy. In contrast to maternal T, neonatal estradiol decreased after parturition. Despite these minor differences between maternal and neonatal hormonal concentrations and levels in the blood, there were no differences

According to Empire magazine, Ralph Fiennes and Kenneth Branagh have passed on the opportunity of playing Quasimodo and Esmeralda in the upcoming Harry Potter film. film adaptations, as are James Bond and Dr No. Both screen legends had turned down the chance of playing the legendary sidekicks in the Harry Potter series, which was thought to be a safe bet for the two. Quasimodo and Esmeralda are two of the characters who have brought a lot of joy to cinema audiences. The role of Quasimodo in Walt Disney's 1951 "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" has been made into a popular film.
