What's new:

II - Part 12Paying attention to what you previously thought to be nothingWaves from a sideshow, Taki: ...A sentence from you from a fraction ...Just what am I daydreaming of: ...What is the sight of staring eyes? ...My consciousness so slowly swallowed ...By the deep sleep of day-dreaming ...Without incident, even deep sleep ...As I intently seeing through tears ...Rain, gone ...From the sky.HerI want to see her immediately. I stopped my body from moving, watching her expression. I've never seen her happy like this. However, I've never seen this expression on her face before—an expression that's difficult to see or describe. It's still painful and sad, but somehow ended up as an expression of surprise. I suddenly felt a weight on my chest. I moved to where I saw her, and slowly introduced myself. Ahahaha. It felt so light! Yet, even though I prepared myself, I couldn't hold back a chill from passing through my body. I got out of bed and started approaching her from behind. As I did so, she turned to look my direction. I wrapped my arm around her neck and... Mamoru arrived. "TK? TK? What are you— Ooof! I heard Mamoru shout. It seemed as if he kicked Taki away. "Wha— What are you doing, TK? That's...! May I ask what happened? I see. Well, that's good at least. We can tell my parents later. TK, I'm sorry." "Hah. So we met each other again." Taki stood up, as if to say something, but was stopped. "TK...maybe you'd better go home." "No." "Don't go in today. I guess—" (Well? So you're finally awake!) "TK...we should call it a day. I can't go on like this forever." "Mamoru's right!" "I know." "I feel bad...I know, I know, I know. I don't think I can do anything. I hope you'll understand."

Marc Roubini has even more trouble explaining why golden memories of the last decade still persist. He also says that gold is still oversold. That these things might be true needs no further explanation. Gold up 350% in a year? ASIA and the Middle East tipped. Gold traded at $1,700 then $2,000 per ounce - and beyond, many investors think, but maybe not this analyst, who thinks gold is cheap now. Despite gold selling off in the US December, coming under $1,000-$1,200/oz in 3/15, why does Japan still hold some, and pretty much all of its pop? From WSJ, The World's Most Resilient Asset: "The US economy may have hit a wall, yet Japan is the world's most resilient asset," the market-beating Mr. Shirota says. The BoJ should lean on the government to opt for near-zero interest rates, he says. If interest rates are set too low, the central bank would not have flexibility to counter threats such as political uprisings, he says. There's a fair debate about whether the BoJ should ramp up inflation or quantitative easing instead of ultra-easy monetary policy, Mr. Shirota says. His preferred option is tax hikes at the end of this fiscal year and a major fiscal overhaul next year. It's true that the recent gains in the yen have made it harder to sell Japanese assets even in a crash, and that a bottom might have been negotiated at around 101, approaching the level where the Nikkei had a 100% gain in October, and some $5 trillion in market cap. But nobody, including the more bearish Shirota, expects a deep enough bear market to sell off Japanese assets. [...] The upshot, echoes Mr. Shirota, is a need for a "resolution to fiscal deficits that stretch out into the future," presumably spending cuts. If the BoJ and the Abe government stepped
