 Arena of Magic 6 Deluxe is the most current version of the game and from here on out will be called Arena of Magic 7.*

Rules

The game is played by matching all the color of the cards to the background tiles. For instance, if a Black card is on black background tile, it makes a black blob. If a white card is on a white background tile, it doesn't make a blob... Instead it changes to a white blob. A red card becomes a red blob on a red background tile. The game starts by each player shuffling up to ten cards (each card is worth one to five points) and drawing four cards. Each player has four turns to do any of the following:

What's new:

Published April 29th, 2011 RALEIGH - One of the North Carolina General Assembly's most significant actions this legislative session was the reduction in gasoline tax by two cents a gallon from July 1, 2010, to July 1, 2011. This action will undoubtedly improve the economy. However, this reduction in tax has also resulted in the creation of moral hazard, which encourages hoarding gasoline and creating a detrimental impact on the environment. For example, anecdotal evidence indicates that some motorists have been altering their driving patterns in anticipation of lower gasoline costs. During the first week of April, a media event was held in Raleigh, and riders from all three Seacoast states attended and participated in a variety of new regulations, called the most seamless increase in auto and cargo bicycle safety in the country. At the event, Governor Beverly Purdue said, "It is about saving lives and reducing accidents." In her address at the event she stated that these new regulations were prompted by the tragic death of a fellow bicycle passenger. As a result of these new regulations, motor vehicle insurance rates in New Hampshire are projected to increase by 20 percent and 10 percent in both Maine and Maine. An old adage in the world of economics is the assurance that any government in public hands is a standing threat to prosperity. If a national government increases the supply of money, it has an adverse effect on the prices of our goods and services, which in turn results in lower income taxes and higher consumption, which is GDP. However, in a free market, a country or state that prints its own money can inflate its money supply and still have virtually no effect on the country's GDP. However, when this inflation takes place through the effect of increased taxation of its citizens, then the Government's impact on its citizens' income taxes and sales tax receipts and therefore on its GDP can be seen. One of the consequences of having a government printing more money is that businesses, suppliers, and consumers will have the option of having less business, less suppliers, and less customers, just by holding onto or borrowing more of its newly created money before paying for it. The harmful result of this inflationary tax is that you cannot spend because you have already spent your money. If government has printed more money, you have more money, and you cannot spend it until you tax yourself. You may start paying now by borrowing, but it takes years to repay the indebtedness. One of the more immediate results of having the
