[Remastered & Remastered] Based on Roskis: A Boozy Beginning, a 2D platformer game with a retro twist. It was developed over the course of 2 years by Zerunt, a video game studio based in Quebec, Canada. Our goal was to create an atmospheric adventure game where characters are caricaturized, but fun nevertheless. To that effect, the game is illustrated by hand drawn sprites, sometimes with jokes, sometimes just for the art. Roskis has been well received by critics and players, and even had a game jam prize in 2014! Roskis was founded by Zerunt in April 2012 as a means to allow the young studio to experiment more, and bring their passion to life. The game was made available to players at the end of 2012 for PC, Mac, Linux and Android (tablet and phone). It became an Indie Game of the Year at the 2013 Los Angeles Indie Game Festival. The game was also nominated for Best Visual Art and Best Theme in 2014 Indie of the Year Game Jam Festival in San Francisco. Zerunt is currently working on a sequel called Roskis 2.

Inflammatory musculoskeletal pain syndromes in cats: a review. Cats are a common source of physical complaints seen by primary care veterinarians. A high proportion of cat owners consider the pet to be in pain and therefore seek help from their veterinarian. Most important is the first line diagnosis and treatment of the underlying cause that is indicated by physical examination. Most causes of musculoskeletal pain are associated with infection. The first line approach for most infectious musculoskeletal pain syndromes is an oral antibiotic (regardless of whether the infectious agent is suspected to be anaerobic). If an infectious disease is suspected (based on physical examination findings and if the infectious agent can be cultured), antibiotic therapy is required. Referral to a specialist for advanced imaging or an in-clinic culture is warranted if there are questions regarding the infectious etiology of the musculoskeletal pain. When infection is excluded and an underlying musculoskeletal disorder is diagnosed, treatment should be directed at reducing symptoms. a right-to- know claim, this is necessary information for the commission to render a fair and informed decision.

MMN is a browser based MMORPG where you have to collect items, visit quests, go to dungeons, fight enemies, and everything else you would expect from an MMORPG. It is only a browser game, but as it is built by Pyro Studio, we can expect a solid experience. The full site is expected to be released in early 2012. The servers are expected to go live sometime in 2012. And finally... diesels, a crackdown on dirty needle, and more provincial leaders are fighting pollution By Rachel Sofer, NTH-5 The Oxtongue power plant has a long history of controversy with calls for a provincial ban of the plant. (CBC) More than four years after China and the provincial government announced sweeping national measures to combat air pollution in the nation's major cities, officials still see a ways to go. Aldermen across the province are in the midst of a January to February blitz to get provincial agencies and organizations to comply and clean up the air — or risk fines in 2019. Last fall, Alberta passed a $60 million-a-year provincial garbage fund to help municipalities clean up the province's trash, with officials promising the money would be available by July. Meanwhile, carbon tax measures designed to cut pollution at coal- and oil-fired power plants will take effect in April, while an announcement of new regulations governing the province's residential sector to control emissions from vehicles, dust, and other sources is expected soon. As these measures take effect, deals and conversations have been struck behind the scenes with federal agencies and governments across Canada. In some cases, Albertans are asked to wait. As governments are being forced to come up with new rules to meet international environmental standards, a dogfight between north and south — specifically between Fort McMurray and Edmonton — suggests that each may be taking the lead. Public health officials insist the strategy is to use Edmonton and the rest of the province as a model to deliver with the actions needed to meet federal and international standards. According to a recent statement from the Canadian Medical Association, the 10 Canadian cities with the highest number of deaths linked to air pollution are largely in southern Ontario, Quebec, and Atlantic Canada. Meanwhile, the statement says air pollution in northern Canada is driven primarily by development and shipping — not industry — but the same production processes contribute to air quality in most of the country. "Children, the elderly, those with heart or lung disease, as well as the remaining sensitive population ... should not be exposed to this degree of air pollution," the statement said. Provincially, Alberta's air quality continued to exceed pollution standards at the end of 2018, with some of the most serious areas on the Prairies. Regions around Edmonton and the city were among the worst 25 in Canada. While northern
