RCD 300.It only took a single weekend of down-time after the Browns season-opener. But after a 27-21 home loss to Kansas City, a team that has played in the postseason nine times since 2000, Cleveland's window for contending has begun to close. Before the season, it seemed as though the Browns would be one of the league's more interesting stories. They had a Hall of Fame quarterback, a talented young player at the top of his position group, a talented young coach with strong connections around the league, and a little bit of a buzz. That buzz soon went flat, and now that window is closing. If not for a couple of players leaving the team, Cleveland would probably be gearing up for a full-on rebuild. It'd be nice for them if that never happened, but no one should be over the moon about where the Browns are right now. While there are many reasons why the Browns are where they are, there are also a number of reasons why they're not as good as they were at the end of the 2017 season. Let's talk about some of them. The quarterback position First of all, this is why it was called the "Quarterback Loaded Browns." Patrick Mahomes has two Super Bowl rings, and then some. Deshaun Watson is really good. But if you were picking one of them to be the starting quarterback in 2018, it'd probably be Watson. That's not to say that Mahomes isn't good. He's a great quarterback. The fact that he was named the NFL's MVP doesn't discredit the fact that Mahomes is a quarterback. But the Browns need a quarterback more than they need to fill out a lineup. If the Browns have a reliable quarterback, they can rely on the defense to carry them. It's why the Browns spend
